“What a difference we could make if every American were encouraged and enabled to give back to their local communities.”

Wal-Mart believes in giving back to the communities it serves every day. Our company maintains a giving spirit, and that spirit is found within the associates, as well.

I've always believed in being involved in the community and always thought that giving back was a great thing to do. Volunteer work is something I love doing. Every Saturday, I cook for the Loaves and Fishes family kitchen and make food for 700 to 900 orphans. Even my son joins me sometimes, calling me “Uncle Dad” because of all the volunteer work I participate in. The opportunities that I've had as a volunteer have been endless. I've been able to work with managers and other associates who really care for the communities just as I do. My position at Wal-Mart allows me to better help others in my community.

Wal-Mart works to set the example on how to best serve others. Now I'm setting the example for my children, my family and my fellow associates. Working with Loaves and Fishes and sharing my talents has been a true example of how giving locally can change so many lives. What a difference we could make if every American were encouraged and enabled to give back to their local communities.

Edwin Yap
Customer Service Manager
Wal-Mart Store #2517
Santa Ana, California

Dear Friends:

At Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., we know that working families count on us. They count on us for convenience. They count on being able to come into our stores and receive friendly, helpful service from our associates. And they count on being able to come to Wal-Mart to save money—on groceries, clothes, school supplies and just about everything you'd need to run a household.

>> But perhaps most importantly, our customers count on us to be a good neighbor. We are proud to be a “store of the community” for all of the communities we serve. We do this through the small things, like allowing the Girl Scouts to sell cookies in front of our stores or sponsoring a Little League team, and through the big things, like funding college scholarships, helping The Salvation Army raise millions through its Red Kettle campaign, and assisting emergency responders in times of disaster. Wal-Mart makes every effort to live up to our customers’ expectations—and to our own.

We operate globally, but we give back locally. In 2005 we contributed more than $245 million in cash and in-kind donations to charitable organizations, with a majority of our giving made at the local level. Our store managers decide where the money goes and how it will make the most difference. At Wal-Mart, we will continue to evolve to meet the individual needs of the communities we serve.

Our donations last year not only helped those in times of despair, but also provided scholarships for the leaders of tomorrow, sent support to our troops and helped children struggling with sickness. We’ve partnered with numerous organizations to generate the resources necessary to assist wherever help is most needed. Our associates have volunteered thousands of hours to support local causes and organizations in their communities. We’re proud of our efforts, and we’re extremely proud that so many of our associates and customers have chosen to join us in support of these efforts.

Wal-Mart’s impact over the past year is one we won’t soon forget. There were so many instances of extraordinary need in the communities we serve. There were hurricanes on the Gulf Coast, tornadoes in the Plains and brush fires in the West. With so many among the Wal-Mart family affected by each of these disasters, we felt an even more urgent need to help. As I write this, we’ve contributed millions in cash and merchandise to the disaster relief efforts.

As we continue in 2006, we’re confident that our philanthropic efforts will continue to grow as we grow. The generosity of our customers and our associates has shown no end, and neither will our commitment to them.

Sincerely,

H. Lee Scott, Jr.

Giving Philosophy

At Wal-Mart, philanthropic stewardship is not simply company policy, it's a way of life. As the largest corporate cash contributor in America, we strive to give back to the areas we serve in ways that will have the strongest impact, by responding to each community's specific needs. That is why the majority of our more than $245 million in cash and in-kind charitable donations were made at the local level in 2005.

We believe the key to understanding the various issues that affect the communities where we have a presence is through cultivating a direct, sustained partnership between our stores, associates and customers. This ensures that charitable funds are distributed in a way that brings the most beneficial support to local communities. Through corporate and Foundation giving, fundraising and volunteering efforts, our grassroots style of philanthropy enables our associates to identify and support organizations that are directly improving the quality of life in their own neighborhoods.

Corporate Giving Overview

Examples of Our Philanthropic Efforts

“The company led the way in corporate cash donations, with more than $18 million in cash donated to aid emergency relief efforts, including the Bush-Clinton Katrina Fund, The Salvation Army, the American Red Cross and the Texas Disaster Relief Fund.”

Hurricane Katrina Response

On August 29, 2005, Hurricane Katrina tore through the Gulf Coast region, leaving colossal damage and destruction in its wake. As a result of Katrina, thousands of lives were lost, even more families were displaced, and entire communities were destroyed within a matter of hours. Without a doubt, Hurricane Katrina was one of the most devastating natural disasters to ever affect our country, and to this day, it still continues to leave its deep imprint on our nation.

As part of our continued commitment to serving those in need, Wal-Mart provided rapid-response relief to hurricane victims through its Emergency Operations Center (EOC). The dedicated members of the EOC team were able to quickly and effectively dispatch truckloads of supplies to those affected by the hurricane by working with Wal-Mart's high-speed logistics team. Additionally, in hard-hit Waveland, Mississippi, a 16,000-square-foot tent store was constructed to provide a refuge where hurricane victims could reach out to loved ones through the Connection Center, which housed cellular products and in-store kiosks, and purchase much-needed supplies.

Wal-Mart's helping hand extended far beyond immediate relief work. The company led the way in corporate cash donations, with more than $18 million in cash donated to aid emergency relief efforts, including the Bush-Clinton Katrina Fund, The Salvation Army, the American Red Cross and the Texas Disaster Relief Fund. Additionally, the company provided $14.5 million in cash assistance to more than 20,000 impacted associates through Wal-Mart's Associate Disaster Relief Fund.

Members of communities across the United States were directly engaged in contributing to hurricane relief efforts through fundraising centers set up in all 3,800 Wal-Mart stores and Sam's Clubs, which raised a total of $8.5 million for Katrina victims.

Serving those in need lies at the core of Wal-Mart's foundation. The company's hurricane relief efforts in 2005 will be one of Wal-Mart's most lasting reminders of our commitment to the communities we serve.

Teacher of the Year 2005

Teachers have one of the most important jobs. Day in and day out, these educators are responsible for instilling knowledge and passion in the young minds of their students. For that alone, teachers deserve an A+.

Wal-Mart's Teacher of the Year program recognizes thousands of teachers across America for their hard work and commitment to our nation's youth. Since the program began in 1995, Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. has honored more than 26,000 teachers nationwide and donated more than $18.5 million to local schools. In 2005, the company provided more than $45 million in support of educational initiatives.

Our 2005 Teacher of the Year winner, Dr. Hector Ibarra of West Branch Middle School in West Branch, Iowa, is a teacher with not only an impressive track record for bringing science to life, but he is also a respected leader among his students and colleagues. Prior to achieving Teacher of the Year honors, he was nationally recognized for his work educating students about the environment.

During the ceremony, Wal-Mart invited Dr. Ibarra on a "science trip" to visit Wal-Mart's Aurora, Colo. Supercenter—the company's second experimental store focused on environmental sustainability. Environmental sustainability has become an increasingly important point of focus for Wal-Mart. The Aurora store features more than 50 experiments aimed at saving energy and helping the environment. As part of the award, Dr. Ibarra's school received a $25,000 educational grant from Wal-Mart, in addition to state and local grants totaling $36,000.

Dr. Ibarra was invited to receive a personal tour of these experiments at the store and learn first-hand what the world's largest retailer is doing to help the environment. Through this experience, Wal-Mart hopes to provide Dr. Ibarra the opportunity to share new information and ideas with his students. In addition, he received a personalized trophy, certificate and one-year membership to Phi Delta Kappa.

Born in Mexico near the one-room schoolhouse where his mother was the teacher and where he learned to speak English in the fourth grade, Dr. Ibarra is now a role model for many others. His life's work is a testament to how one educator can positively impact not only his students, but the community at large.

Phi Delta Kappa Executive Director Dr. William Bushaw said, "Dr. Ibarra is an outstanding representative of the thousands of outstanding teachers in this country who inspire their students every day."
